Son Of Board Chairman, New N. Y. Times Publisher, 37, Follows Family Enterprise Tradition Of 65 Years

Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, who was named president and publisher of The New York Times succeeding Orvil E. Dryfoos, his brother-in-law, who died on May 25. The announcement of Mr. Sulzberger's appointment was made by his father, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, who remains chairman of the board of The Times, after a regular meeting of the board.

At the same meeting, the board elected Harding F. Bancroft vice president to succeed Amory H. Bradford, who resigned. Mr. Bancroft served as secretary of the company since 1957 and will retain that office, says the New York Times. The title of general manager, which Mr. Bradford had held since 1960, has been discontinued.

In other changes, Mrs. Marian Sulzberger Dryfoos, widow of the late publisher and eldest daughter of Mr. Ochs, was named a member of the board and Andrew [illegible], formerly assistant general manager, was appointed assistant to the president. [illegible] publisher of The Times, who is 37 years old on February [illegible], is the youngest chief executive [illegible] has ever had. His maternal grandfather, Adolph S. Ochs, died [illegible] months past his 80th birthday when he took over the paper in August, 1896.

Mr. Dryfoos was succeeded at his death on May 25, 1963, by his son-in-law, Arthur Hays Sulzberger, who was at that time, Mr. Dryfoos, president, in 1957, [illegible] publisher.

Arthur Sulzberger is no stranger to the family tradition in the operation and policies of The Times. He said:

"When Adolph S. Ochs died in 1935, he left in trust for the benefit of his wife, and daughter, Mrs. Iphigene Ochs Sulzberger, the controlling interest of The New York Times, which, with the amount held by his family, now comes to about two-thirds of the voting stock of the company. On Mrs. Sulzberger's death this interest is to be divided among our four children. It can therefore be truly said that The Times is a family enterprise.

"For over 65 years a member of the family has been the publisher of The New York Times. My son-in-law, Orvil Dryfoos, continued this tradition and under his leadership this newspaper made important advances. It is our intention to continue this family operation and insure continuance of the newspaper that The Times has come to be under those who by sentiment and training are particularly tied to its principles and traditions.

"My son, Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, has more than proved himself over the many years that he has been here as well as during the difficult period of the recent long strike. I therefore am delighted that the board of directors of The New York Times has appointed him president and publisher."

The new publisher was born in New York on February 5, 1926. He attended the Loomis School in Windsor, Conn., and received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Columbia in 1951. He had served in the Marine Corps from 1944 to 1946 and saw service in Korea, in 1951 and 1952, beginning as a second lieutenant, says The New York Times. He was released as a first lieutenant and later became a captain in the Marine Corps Reserve.

On completion of his second tour of active duty, he worked briefly as a cub reporter on The Times's local staff. He then became a reporter for The Milwaukee Journal and later worked on The Journal's state news desk.

Returning to The Times, he spent three months on the foreign news copy desk before going overseas as a correspondent in June, 1954. He served in the London, Paris, and Rome bureaus of the newspaper. Returning to New York, he became assistant to the publisher in 1956 and assistant treasurer two years later.

Among friends at The Times, and to members of his family, Mr. Sulzberger is known as Punch. The nickname was originated by his father. When the boy was born, Judith, the youngest of his three sisters, was known as Judy. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, indulging a penchant for light verse, responded to his gift [illegible] to name a Punch to Judy's [illegible] show."

Mrs. Sulzberger wanted to name the baby Arthur Hays Jr. The father protested; Arthur Ochs was the compromise—but Punch stuck from the beginning.

On July 2, 1946, Mr. Sulzberger married Miss Barbara Grant. They had two children, Arthur Ochs Sulzberger Jr., and Karen Alden. The marriage ended in divorce in 1956. On December 19 of that year, Mr. Sulzberger married Miss Carol Fox Fuhrman. He adopted Cathy Jean, who was Mrs. Sulzberger's daughter by her previous marriage.

Mrs. Dryfoos, who will assume the place on the board left vacant by the death of her husband, is the eldest of the four children of Mr. and Mrs. Hays Sulzberger. The others are Mrs. Ruth Sulzberger Golden, Dr. Judith Sulzberger Cohen, and the new publisher, who is the youngest of the children.

Under the will of Mr. Ochs, three trustees controlled the voting stock of The Times. These were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Hays Sulzberger, and Julius Ochs Adler, vice president and general manager, who died on October 3, 1955, says The New York Times. At that time, Mr. Dryfoos became the third trustee.

The title of general manager was discontinued until 1960, when Mr. Bradford assumed it, and it has now been discontinued again. It also was made known that Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, the new publisher, has become the third trustee, succeeding Mr. Dryfoos.

Mayor Tells How Rightist Group Blocks Civic Progress

The Mayor of Stamford, Conn., accused the John Birch Society of blocking civic progress. Mayor J. Walter Kennedy said the right-wing organization "masquerades behind other groups in Stamford and threatens to stop the growth of the community."

Mr. Kennedy, who is resigning to become commissioner of the National Basketball Association, voiced his criticism in elaborating on an address made to the Stamford Rotary Club, says the New York Times. In the talk, the 50-year-old Mayor said he questioned the intégrity of those "who belong to this society and will not admit it publicly."

"I am particularly concerned about the inroads of the far right," he said. "I am fearful of those who would say of President Kennedy and President Eisenhower that they have Communist leanings."

Mr. Kennedy had cited regional planning and urban re-development as "particular targets" of the John Birch group. The city has been working on an $85,000,000 downtown redevelopment project for many months.

Explaining that was "the way these fellows work behind the scenes," Mr. Kennedy recalled that "when we had a vacancy on the Board of Education almost all the calls on behalf of one of the potential candidates were from known members of the John Birch Society."

Mr. Kennedy said the Society had opposed "virtually every project that I have started or been in[illegible]

"I have no quarrel with those who feel that what they say is right —that's the American way. I do quarrel with those who use, as a broad base, the philosophy of the John Birch Society."

He described Stamford as "a hotbed" of the Birch movement and noted that the group had been active in establishing an American Opinion Library bookstore in the downtown section. A so-called area coordinator for the society, Thomas J. Davis, lives in Stamford on Bertmor Drive.

Mayor Kennedy predicted that he would be criticized for "many weeks" for attacking the Society, saying that the group was fond of characterizing its detractors either as Communists or with Communist leanings, says the New York Times. Mr. Kennedy said, however, that initial reaction to his Rotary speech had been wholly favorable.

Six-Month Record Of U.J.A. Donations Is $33 Million

A record sum of $33,425,000 has been contributed in the United States this year to the United Jewish Appeal, to meet Jewish needs throughout the world, with emphasis on aid to Jewish refugees in France and Israel.

Joseph Meyerhoff, of Baltimore, the Appeal's general chairman, said that the sum was a result of an intensive six-week collection drive "to translate pledges on hand into a great life — saving flow of funds" to carry out programs of relief and rehabilitation, says the New York Times. Mr. Meyerhoff spoke at an all-day meeting of the Appeal's national campaign cabinet, the top planning and policy — setting body, at the Plaza Hotel, in New York. Jewish leaders from every section of the U.S. attended.

Despite the record cash receipts, S. Z. Shragai, head of the immigrant department of the Jewish Agency for Israel, in Jerusalem, told American leaders that his agency faced a "piling up of unmet human needs because immigrant aid requirements are far out-pacing both the amount we budgeted as well as the flow of available funds."

Mr. Shragai's department is responsible for the reception and resettlement of newcomers to Israel. He said that the first six months of this year were marked by one of the heaviest immigrations in the last ten years, with "most of them coming in with very little in the way of financial resources."

Mr. Shragai stressed the need of social and medical services for the newcomers as well as for educational projects that require heavy expenditures.

Reporting at the same session, [illegible] chairman of the cash collection campaign, asked for intensified support by American Jews. He pointed out the special needs of "thousands of Algerian Jews who have entered France."

Mr. Fink said that Jews and non-Jews "may find their government repatriation allowances terminated" by July 1. Then, he said, the Jewish welfare agencies in France "will turn instinctively to the Joint Distribution Committee

Came To U. S. At 20 With $4 And Big Heart, Built Blocks Of N. Y. Homes, 400 Apartments, Began Lefrak City To House 25,000 In 1966

Tribute to Harry Lefrak, chairman of the Lefrak Organization, of New York, one of America's largest builders, was paid in the Forest Hills Jewish Center, 106-06 Queens Boulevard, Queens. Earlier, a funeral service was held at Forest Park Chapel in Forest Hills.

More than 500 friends, associates, and relatives attended the ceremonies, at which the eulogy was delivered by Rabbi Josiah Derby, of the Rego Park (Queens), Jewish Center, says the New York Times. He referred to the many institutions that Mr. Lefrak supported. "The monuments to him are not on the streets of New York and elsewhere," he said, "but those he built in the hearts of people."

Israel Meir, Consul of Israel, said that Mr. Lefrak would always be remembered in Israel for the institutions he established and supported there.

Burial was in Mount Hebron Cemetery, Flushing, Queens.

Harry Lefrak, aged 78, who came to New York as a 20-year-old immigrant with $4 in his pocket and founded the apartment house empire that bears his name, died at Kew Gardens General Hospital in Queens after a long illness, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was chairman of the Lefrak Organization, which has built more than 400 apartment buildings in the New York area. The company estimates that one of every 16 New Yorkers lives in a Lefrak house.

Mr. Lefrak, who lived at 108-25 68th Avenue, Forest Hills, Queens, was born in Baboch, Russia. His family moved to Kalisch when he was a child, and at the age of 20 he came to New York. At Ellis Island, he had only $4 in cash and a battered suitcase.

His first home was a tenement at 25 Suffolk Street, on the lower East Side. To earn money, he shoveled snow at first, but soon became involved in the building business. He worked as a glazier and a carpenter. Then he began building houses.

Mr. Lefrak started with private houses in Brooklyn and built entire blocks of homes there, but during the building boom of the 1920's he decided that the answer to New York's housing problem was in multi-family apartment buildings. He pioneered apartment house construction and created Lefrak neighborhoods in all five boroughs.

His company built the Kings Bay Housing Development, Brooklyn's first city-aided, middle-income housing project under the state's Mitchell-Lama law. And he saw construction of the first section of the vast $150 million Lefrak City now rising on 40 acres in Forest Hills. When completed in 1966 the middle-income project will house 25,000, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Lefrak gave up many of his activities in 1948 when his son, Samuel J. Lefrak, took over management of the business.

A story is told of an early Lefrak building venture, a two-story house in Brooklyn. When it was finished, Mr. Lefrak discovered a bad blunder. He had forgotten to include a dumbwaiter, essential to houses in those days. That kind of omission rarely happened again.

Mr. Lefrak's houses included not only the tested essentials, but often innovations of his own. One such change was elimination of dark, interior courtyards, and a movement toward a grouping of buildings so that each apartment had at least partial outside exposure. Also, he moved toward elimination of non-functional dust-catchers in his apartment designs.

Mr. Lefrak worked hard to avoid creating a stereotype image of a heartless landlord for himself. For example, in 1956, an off-Broadway production of Maxim Gorki's "The Lower Depths" was struggling to stay alive. The producer was having trouble paying the theater rent and owed $277.50. When Mr. Lefrak heard about it, he came to the rescue and paid the bill. And he noted that the play deals with a merciless landlord who was beaten to death by one of his tenants.

Jewish Leaders Continue Attack On "Alienated Intellectual"

Philip Roth and other Jewish writers were denounced in New York by a rabbi in the continuing attack by Jewish leaders on the "alienated Jewish intellectual." Preaching at Central Synagogue, Lexington Avenue at 55th Street, the Rev. Dr. David J. Seligson decried their lack of "interest in the sacred places of the Jewish spirit."

He deplored their "vulgarizations of Jewish traditions, their patronizing attitude toward the whole sweep of our great literature, their apparent unawareness of the role that the Jew has played in civilization and their inability to find any affirmative contact with the Jewish past and present . . ."

Mr. Roth, defending his works at a recent symposium in Israel, said that "the biggest passion in my life is to write fiction, not to be a Jew." The novelist also defended the creation of unsympathetic characters, says the New York Times. Rabbi Seligson asserted that he was "not saying that Jews, as individuals or as a group, must always be portrayed with a halo." But he accused Jewish writers of "the exclusive creation of a melancholy parade of caricatures," and gave these examples:

Mr. Roth's collection of short stories, "Goodby Columbus," in which he described "a Jewish adulterer and . . . a host of other lopsided schizophrenic personalities." This "could hardly be said to be a balanced portrayal of Jews as we know them," the rabbi commented.

Myron Kaufmann's "Remember Me To God," which "takes us on a slumming safari among primitives in a jungle that could hardly be said to be recognizable as a Jewish sociological study."

The novels of Jerome Weidman, whose "insecure, self-hating neurotic characters may be exotic and may be a delightful confirmation of existing Christian stereotypes, but they are certainly not true to the type of Jew that you and I know and who represent the overwhelming majority of the American Jewish community."

The rabbi said he could only "wonder about" gifted writers "Jewish by birth, who can see so little in the tremendous saga of Jewish history."

"That they must be free to write, we would affirm most vehemently; but that they would know their own people and tradition, we would fervently wish," he added.

Seligson contrasted "the eternal alien" with President Kennedy, whose visit to his ancestral village in Ireland showed "greatness", says the New York Times. The rabbi called the visit "an acceptance of one's ancestry, a tribute to one's forebears."

A Silent World, But Happy People, Bright And Smiling

Nothing but the sound of the rhythmical tap-tap of cobblers' tools is heard in the workshop. No human voices, no laughter, no orders shouted by the boss. Occasionally one will put his tools down and gesture with his hands. Another will nod. And they will resume their work.

Here people work silently, but they are bright and smiling. This light, airy shoe plant, located in a new business center of this ancient Crusader town north of Haifa is the silent, but efficient and happy, world of the Hanufa family. For, except for Shalom, the head of the plant, all the other workers, his brother Jacob and their five sons and one daughter, are deaf-mutes. You don't have to talk while you work, explains the patriarch of the 25-member Hanufa clan. Matter of fact, perhaps you get more work done without talk, turning out twenty pairs of women's shoes, and 120 pairs of sandals daily is not a bad record. And the proof is that the shop supports the two brothers, their wives, seventeen children, and four cousins.

Shalom Hanufa is a highly-skilled shoemaker. The footwear he used to make back in a small Algerian town, bordering on the Sahara Desert, where the family lived until the end of 1961, had a fine reputation. Shoemaking was a tradition in the Hanufa family. It was a trade handed down from father to son for generations.

All they could bring to Israel was their skill and their willingness to work. They had to leave everything behind in the turmoil of the Algerian upheaval. When Shalom descended the gangplank of the immigrant ship that brought them all to Haifa he was determined to hold his family together and put his skill to use.

It didn't take long before "Sylvia Shoes" opened in Acre's Jabotinsky Street, thanks to the help of the Constructive Loan Department of Malben (the Joint Distribution Committee's welfare program for new immigrants to Israel), and the Jewish Agency. JDC has granted close to 9,000 loans from its Constructive Loan Fund from June, 1950, when the fund was set up, through the end of 1962. These loans, financed with funds from the United Jewish Appeal, amounted to $1,692,000 and benefitted more than 40,000 recent immigrants.

Malben's business instructors in the Constructive Loan Department didn't have to teach the family anything in the way of shoemaking, but they did help in purchasing machinery, planning production, and contacting retail outlets in the vicinity. A cousin of Shalom's, who had preceded the family to Israel by a couple of years, joined the enterprise as commercial manager. "Sylvia Shoes" was in business.

Now, not quite a year after the Hanufas descended the gangplank, Shalom has every reason to grin broadly when asked whether they are happy. He got more than he ever dared to hope for, he says in fair Hebrew. And what is more, the doctors have found that Makhloof, his twelve-year-old son, is not altogether deaf. A medical examination indicated there was a trace of hearing left and through a hearing aid provided by JDC-Malben, Hakhloof heard his first sounds in twelve years. Now he attends a special school for deaf children and maybe next year, on his Bar Mitzvah, he will read a portion of the Torah on the Sabbath for all the congregation to hear.

"What more does a man want?" asks Shalom Hanufa. "We are all busy, and have enough to eat. All twenty-five of us!"

And during the 16-week newspaper strike this year, the Lefrak Organization declared a rent moratorium for all its tenants who were affected by the work stoppage. After World War II, says the New York Herald Tribune, Lefrak established the Lefrak Foundation through which much of his fortune was channeled to charitable institutions.

The Foundation sponsored three hospitals in Israel and contributed to the Jewish Chronic Disease Hospital in Brooklyn where the Harry and Sarah Lefrak Pavilion was dedicated recently.

Mr. Lefrak had served as associate chairman of the Jewish National Fund of America, and was a trustee of the Forest Hills Jewish Center; the Rabbi Dov Revel Yeshiva of Forest Hills; the Beth El Hospital of Brooklyn; the Jewish Chronic Disease Hospital of Brooklyn; and the Haym Salomon Home for the Aged in Brooklyn.

Surviving, besides his son, are two daughters, Mrs. Harold Menowits, and Mrs. Marty N. Lipschutz; a sister, Mrs. Mollie Alpert; seven grandchildren; and four great-grandchildren. His wife, Mrs. Sarah Schwartz Lefrak, died in November.

The Committee, one of the principal beneficiaries of the United Jewish Appeal, carries out aid programs to Jews throughout the world. It has been particularly active in France, where the influx of North African Jews has swelled the French Jewish population from 300,000 to 500,000, says the New York Times. The Appeal's nationwide goal for 1963 is $66,000,000, including a special fund of $24,000,000 that will be used to aid newcomers to Israel.

Gifts were given at the meeting to Avraham Harman, Israel's Ambassador to the U.S., and Michael M. Comay, Israel's Ambassador to the United Nations, for their efforts on behalf of the Appeal.

Israeli Army Chaplain Found Tide Of Assimilation Very Strong In Scandinavian Jewry

The presence of an Israeli Army Chaplain left a deep impression on Scandinavian Jewry last month. His visit, arranged and sponsored, Lieut. Col. Rav Mordechai Peron spent some time in every Jewish community, large or small, in all four countries: Denmark, Sweden, Finland, and Norway. He addressed public meetings, delivered sermons in synagogues, held conferences with communal organizations, leaders and educators, visited schools, and was approached time and again by numbers of distressed individuals with personal problems.

He spoke in English, Yiddish, German, and Ivrit. His trip has been acclaimed as an immense success. However, he himself feels that all depends upon the "follow up".

Rav Peron found Scandinavian Jewry facing a severe crisis. They are subjected to enormous assimilationist pressures. Small Jewish communities are surrounded by large non-Jewish environments. Their lives are peaceful and stable. No anti-Semitism is evident; the Jews are unreservedly accepted by their neighbours; and, in Denmark especially, they are obsessed by a deep feeling of gratitude for their being rescued by the non-Jewish community from destruction by the Nazis.

Jewish education cannot provide a raison d'etre for Jewish survival, since the hours devoted to Jewish instruction are 1-1½ per week, as against the many hours each day devoted to secular studies. A fourteen-year-old who already receives a quasi-scientific education learns Hebrew on a three-year-old level. In wide circles among the youth there is no love for Jewish studies, and no appreciation of Jewish values.

The result is that Intermarriage has reached alarming proportions. Nevertheless, Rav Peron felt that his visit has revealed a growing concern about the Jewish future. Parents wanted their children to grow up better Jews than they were. On all sides he heard cries: "Send us a Rav, give us a teacher. We'll pay for the cost." If strenuous efforts were now exerted, he was confident that significant positive results could be achieved.

First on Rav Peron's itinerary was Copenhagen. The community numbers about 7,000, but there were many unaffiliated. The situation is better than in other communities. He delivered six lectures, the main topics being: "Judaism And Christianity", "Judaism In Modern Times", and "Fundamentals Of Judaism". Two talks were delivered in Hebrew. He visited the community school and spoke with the teachers. Both the Chief Rabbi Melchior and Rabbi Chaikin were extremely helpful.

Together with Mr. Levin, the Israeli Ambassador to Denmark, Col. Peron visited the Danish Minister of Religions, Mme. Bodl Koch. She evinced keen interest in the religious and cultural problems of Israel. Rabbi Peron and the

Nazis Killed Off Welfare Center Workers; Institute To Train Directors

Twelve young men and women from five European countries, chosen from 240 applicants, have been enrolled in a training institute for directors of European Jewish community centers, which opened in Israel, it was announced by Charles H. Jordan, director-general of the Joint Distribution Committee. Yehudah Rosenman, executive director of the Jewish Community Center of Baltimore, will direct the project. Ten years ago there was not a single Jewish center in all of continental Europe, Mr. Jordan stated. Today there are 82 youth and community centers in operation in western Europe, due largely to the impetus provided by German reparation funds made available to the communities by the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany, administered and supplemented by J.D.C., with United Jewish Appeal funds.

"This phenomenal growth brought with it the need for trained staff, none of which was available in Europe," Mr. Jordan continued. "A new category of personnel was needed, for center work is a profession which requires special knowledge and skills. Without such personnel, all the money and effort expended to set up the new centers would go to waste and it was to solve this problem that the training institute was launched."

"One of the tragedies of the Hitler era was the disappearance of an entire generation of Jewish leaders," Mr. Jordan said. "The Nazis killed off virtually all community leaders, welfare workers, and youth and center workers. In all of Europe barely a handful of professionally-trained center workers can be found. The training institute marks another step forward in the rebuilding of Europe's Jewish communities." All twelve students chosen were recommended by their communities and have entered into agreements to work, upon completion of their studies, for the community that recommended them. Ranging in age from 25 to 35, the students come from, and will eventually serve in, France, Greece, Sweden, Belgium, Yugoslavia, and Germany.

Mr. Jordan noted that other agencies cooperating in the project are the Commission on Centers and Vacation Camps of the Standing Conference on European Jewish Community Services, which initiated and planned the institute; the Youth Department of the Jewish Agency for Israel, which will provide and finance six months of study in the Hebrew language and Jewish cultural subjects; and the Paul Baerwald School of Social Work of the Hebrew University, where the courses in center work will be given. J.D.C. will pay for transportation to Israel and for maintenance and tuition at the Paul Baerwald School.

Couple Adds $250,000 To Brandeis U. For Tuition Aid

A Swampscott, Massachusetts, couple has awarded $250,000 to Brandeis University for tuition assistance to deserving students. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel M. Klivansky, of 103 Puritan Lane, said that the grant will provide two kinds of scholarships for Brandeis undergraduates. Part of the sum will assist students from the North Shore communities of Lynn, Salem, or Swampscott, seeking degrees at the Waltham, Mass., liberal arts University; and, as a second provision, financial assistance will be made available for a Brandeis student to study in Israel or for an Israeli youngster to come to Brandeis.

Any scholarship given to a Salem youth will be a memorial to Mrs. Klivansky's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Albert, (Tina), who lived there. All other scholarships will be dedicated to the memory of Mr. Klivansky's parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. John (Rose) Klivansky. Both donors have long records of participation in community work. Mr. Klivansky, a Lynn attorney since 1928, has been vice-president of Temple Beth El in Lynn, and was that city's 1962 Jewish Community Federation president. For 1963, he is serving as a campaign co-chairman.

He is a trustee of the Lynn Hospital and a member of its nine-man executive board. Mr. Klivansky attended public school in Lynn; Brown University; and is a graduate of Boston University School of Law. He is a member of Zeta Beta Tau Fraternity. Mrs. Klivansky has been active in her support of virtually every leading civic and charitable group in the area. She holds life memberships in many groups, and attended Boston University.

In accepting the Klivansky benefaction, Brandeis U. President, Abram L. Sachar, noted that the cash gift comes at "an especially propitious time in Brandeis's history." He said that it was even more valuable than the sum indicates since it will be applied towards the $15,000,000 Brandeis U. must secure in the next three years in order to meet the challenge of the Ford Foundation's recent $6,000,000 gift to the University. Dr. Sachar said that Brandeis is required to raise three dollars in cash for each dollar from the Ford Foundation and that the Klivansky gift makes a vital contribution to that total.

He also noted that the gift was especially perceptive because it provided sums in a critical area of University need. More than one-third of the Brandeis undergraduates receive financial assistance each year, he said, and this new addition to the scholarship funds will help to provide the more than one million dollars Brandeis U. must find each year to help its deserving and qualified students.

COST OF ORT ACTIVITIES IN 1962 WAS OVER $7 MILLION

One hundred and twenty thousand Algerian Jewish refugees now in France face a prolonged period of acute hardship unless large scale measures are taken to provide them with skills for speedy employment, according to a report made public by ORT, the Organization for Rehabilitation through Training. ORT is the world-wide vocational training agency for Jews. Entitled ORT Yearbook 1963, the report was released simultaneously by the organization's headquarters in New York, and Geneva, Switzerland. The publication announced that more than 38,000 persons last year received educational and economic aid in 579 ORT training units. "This network comprises the largest non-governmental system of vocational education in the world", according to the Yearbook.

The ORT programs were conducted in nineteen countries, chiefly in Israel, North Africa, Iran, Poland, and Western Europe. The report announced the establishment of a new activity in Bombay, India, "for the purpose of teaching industrial skills to youth of the depressed Jewish community there".

Technical assistance projects instituted in conjunction with the U.S. Government are reported. Under terms of agreements with the Agency for International Development, official foreign aid agency, ORT has organized technical and vocational schools in the West African countries of Guinea and Mali. The budget for these projects is given as $1,687,849. The Yearbook records President Kennedy's description of these projects as "vital to the economic, educational, and technological progress of the people of these emerging nations". Other ORT activities on behalf of technically under-developed countries were pursued with the governments of Israel and Switzerland and the U.N.'s International Labor Organization.

In response to emergency requirements of Algerian Jewish arrivals, ORT greatly expanded its training programs for newcomers in France. The Yearbook notes that new ORT vocational schools were opened in Marseilles and Toulouse. Emergency courses were organized in ORT schools in the Paris area, Lyon, and Strasbourg. Plans for 1963 call for an accelerated growth in all training services.

The report notes, however, that the dimension of need is vast and that many applicants are already being turned away for lack of funds and adequate facilities. Indicative of the problem's scope, the ORT Yearbook calls attention to such "population explosions" as the rise in the Jewish community of Paris from 175,000 to 250,000; in Marseilles, from 15,000 to 75,000; and in France as a whole from 300,000 Jews to 500,000 over the last three years.

In reviewing the results of ORT work last year, the report finds that "almost 10,000 students completed training. In practically all instances, graduates were easily absorbed in employment, often at above average starting pay". According to the Yearbook, 500,000 persons in 28 countries have been served by ORT since the end of the Second World War. "ORT graduates can be found working for Renault in France; in the Olivetti plants of Milan, or the state radio and television networks throughout Italy; in telecommunications, railroad and aviation maintenance of North African countries; in Israel, at the Dead Sea Potash Works, the Bedek airplane shops at Lydda, the mines at Timna, and the tractor and farm equipment depots of agricultural settlements".

Enrollment in Israel ORT schools doubled in the first three years of the sixties. For the integration of oriental immigrant youth as Israel's "internal problem number one" a new program of apprenticeship centers will reach out and bring within the fold of organized education above the primary level, combined with job training, between 12,000 and 15,000 such youngsters. This will open the gates of opportunity to a large segment of Israel's youth not hitherto provided for.

The report finds "a historic transformation" taking place in the pattern of Jewish occupations. Interest in "traditional" occupations of the underprivileged Jew is practically nil among young people. There are, for example, only three carpentry courses in all of ORT for such youth and none in tailoring. They have been replaced by refrigeration, electronics, engine repair, and metal work. The list of new fields introduced into the ORT curriculum over the last decade includes metallurgy, electronics, telecommunications, architectural drafting, construction technology. Girls abandoned sewing crafts in favor of secretarial skills, interior decoration, medical and industrial laboratory work.

The cost of all ORT activities in 1962 was $7,381,692. The Joint Distribution Committee allocated $1,885,000 or about 26 per cent. Women's American ORT is credited with the second largest contribution, totalling $912,000. More than half of ORT costs are met overseas, a considerable portion within the communities served.

The Ordeal Of American Negroes Contains Even Resentment Against White Liberals

BY DORE SCHARY, CHAIRMAN OF THE ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH

James Howard Meredith recently told a reporter, "I'm not a well-adjusted Negro. I don't want to ever think I'm well-adjusted as a Negro."

He meant, of course, adjustment to the separate but unequal life of a Negro in Mississippi. His mother, the wife of a cotton farmer, approved of her son's role as the first and only Negro enrolled at Ole Miss. It called for him to walk the gauntlet of hundreds of jeering, name-calling white students. "I'm glad he did it," she said. "I never once doubted he had the courage."

There is a new militancy among Negroes. Along with it is a greater resentment of whites because of ever-broken hopes and promises. And these expressions of resentment are today more candid and forthright than ever.

The causes of resentment are itemized in the newspapers every day. It is sufficient to note that the Emancipation Proclamation is now 100 years old — and its promise still remote from reality; that the Supreme Court's decision on desegregation of public schools came in 1954 — and to this day no more than 7 to 8 per cent of Negro children in the South attend integrated schools.

This new militance toughens and mobilizes parts of the Negro community which have never before been involved in civil rights activity — the very idea seemed remote to them a few years ago. The old established forms of protest and improvement — leaving things in the hands of experts and lawyers — no longer satisfy great parts of the Negro community, especially the young people.

The motives of the white liberal community, the meaning of the Judeo-Christian tradition are being seriously questioned. The Black Muslims are but the most publicized of various Negro movements produced in dire reaction to the cruel past. They have a tragically racist appeal, they preach a hate produced by hate, they deny that all men are brothers.

If white Northerners feel the slightest bit smug about their treatment of Negroes, let them be reminded: The Black Muslim movement is essentially a phenomenon of the urban North, a reflection of the Negro ghettos, poverty, inadequate education — and again — broken promises.

In a complicated way, Jews often appear to Negroes to be members of the propertied white Establishment, its nearest representatives, and a special target. In urban areas of the North, often enough, Negroes moved into communities after first-generation American Jews started to leave them for better housing. But Jewish "influence" continued to be felt by the newcomers; for many years now the term "Jewish landlord" has had a special and negative meaning to many Negroes. In the North and South, the Jewish peddler became the local shop or department store owner; Negroes had contact with them, all out of proportion to numbers. The Negro-white [illegible], in current Negro boycotts of retail stores in primarily Negro sections often adds to Negro-Jewish tensions, too.

Today, inevitably there are expressions of anti-Semitism among Negroes. The Black Muslims express it one way; its leaders tell followers that Jews might serve as an example: "Jews are unified and well-organized, Jews have managed to get hold of property, own their own facilities, hotels, and restaurants, Jews have carved out their own state in Israel. We can learn, should learn how they did it, do it ourselves, do it better." Implicit in this is both envy and hostility.

Anti-Semitism is occasionally seen even in the more conservative Negro press — and in the statements of the more demagogic Negro political leaders. A news magazine recently planned to feature a story about anti-Semitism among Negroes; it sent a reporter to Harlem, a Negro, to research the story. He came back to his office to shake his white colleagues by the virulence of the anti-Semitic remarks he had heard during his interviews.

ADL research in the South has found anti-Semitism among Negroes there too. Since the Supreme Court decision, the South has been a special target for the anti-Semitic and racist literature of such a man as Conde McGinley in his Common Sense, and The Thunderbolt of the National States Rights Party. This material is now getting into the hands of Negroes too; the racist anti-Negro portions they take for granted and ignore — the anti-Semitic portions they seem to have a tendency to read and retain.

Negro anti-Semitism is a particular tragedy because it is so misguided. Responsible Negro leadership knows that Jews and Jewish organizations have had a major role in the drive for equal rights for all Americans. Jewish organizations were often instrumental in forming the human relations councils that developed throughout the country immediately after World War II; in the educational campaigns for FEPC and other types of civil rights legislation that have gone into the statute books of scores of states in the past eighteen years; in the development of the whole course of human relations education throughout the country.

In his misguided, twisted way, the professional bigot recognizes this when he accuses Jews of trying to "mongrelize" the nation or of being a moving force behind the Negro integration movement. "Mongrelization," of course, is hardly the issue; democracy, security, and equal opportunity are the sum total of the aims of human rights groups, Jewish or otherwise.

There is pain and anguish and the continued crippling of the Negro psyche every day. Still, in the historical sense, the eighteen years since the war have witnessed astounding strides toward equal opportunity for Negroes, unprecedented in rate since the end of slavery. The improvement has been on economic and social levels primarily and now — with the Negro's emphasis on his right to vote — the progress will soon be in the political arena too.

In a sense, it is precisely because so much progress has been made in the past eighteen years that Negroes today have achieved this new militancy, the sense of revolt — instead of the abject hopelessness that afflicted so many before. Their patience until now has been almost infinite; their impatience now is understandable, but, it may also, in its reactions, bring this nation to crises of violence before the ultimate of real integration is achieved.

It is easy to understand why Negroes have a need to scapegoat, why they suspect the motives of the best of whites, including their allies who now say: "Temper your impatience with reason and reality." "How long, how long, O Lord," they feel.

The term liberal is often a term of derision to Negroes today; they are even suspicious of those whites who join in freedom rides or sitins as being out on a lark of sorts, seeking some psychological catharsis.

It may seem a remote notion to Americans in normal situations, but many Negroes, in their anguish and impatience, compare Nazi Germany at the time it was persecuting and killing millions with the United States of America today. The equation cannot be made; all the force of federal government, the will of the majority, our law, and our common heritage are on the side of progress, of the achievement of human rights.

Nazi Germany's course was one of a constant downward spiral, into degradation and the pit of evil. But the mood of many Negroes is that they have long been condemned to hell by white Americans and that gradualism — gradual release from purgatory as they see it — is not the answer.

QUEBEC — ONTARIO — THE MARITIMES

ISRAEL ARMY CHAPLAIN

Ambassador extended an official invitation to her to visit Israel.

In Sweden, his first stop was at Malmo. There, together with our representative in Stockholm, A. Levy, he visited a seminar, organized by the Zionist Federation and the Agency, attended by 120 delegates from all over Scandinavia. As guest of honour, he spoke on "The Jewish Conception Of Galut And Geula." On Shabbat he delivered a sermon in the Synagogue. He visited the nearby communities, and then proceeded to Goteborg where he met in conference with the communal leaders and lectured on: "Peace And War In The Perspective Of Judaism".

He spent almost a whole week in Stockholm in speaking engagements, lectures, meetings, and conferences. Specially noteworthy was his address to an assembly of youth organizations, among whom the Bnei Akiva was prominent. His topic was: "Religion, Science, And Technological Developments From The Jewish Point Of View." He visited the Jewish Day School and paid tribute to the heroic efforts of our representatives, Mr. and Mrs. Levi. He also met with a number of non-Jewish dignitaries.

His next stop was at Helsinki in Finland. About 1800 Jews descended from former Cantonists of Czarist Russia live there. The efforts of Rav Be'eri are energetic and are appreciated by the community. However, the youth is assimilated. There is a Day School with 90 children; but a sad dearth of teachers. Rav Peron spoke forthrightly and bluntly to the community. He told them: There is only one way, a Judaism of Torah. All other paths lead to disintegration and destruction. In Turku he found 150 families. Our representatives, Mr. and Mrs. Daglan, are doing all they can. The tide of assimilation is, however, extremely strong.

The last country on his itinerary was Norway. In Oslo, over 100 people came to hear him. This was the first time in many years that so large an audience had come to hear a speaker on Jewish topics. The need for a Rabbi and teacher in the community is desperate. From there, Rav Peron flew to the Northernmost Jewish settlement in the world, Trondheim. The community consists of 150 Jews, some religious. Several were quite prosperous, being engaged in the textile business. However, the community did not seem to have a future. Rav Peron suggested that they arrange to share the Rav of Oslo with that community, and that he spend several days each month in Trondheim. This proposal was heartily approved.

Immediately on his return, Rav Peron presented an exhaustive report in the head office of the Torah department. His discussions are continuing, and the department will consider ways and means to implement his constructive suggestions.

W.J.C. WANTS INFORMATION ON VOGELGARN, MALE NURSE, OR ANY JEWISH DOCTORS AT MAIDANEK

Jewish medical personnel who survived Maidanek concentration camp are being sought by the World Jewish Congress in New York in connection with an investigation of Nazi crimes now being carried out by the West German authorities.

During the massacre of 42,000 Jews in the city and district of Lublin in November, 1943, known as Aktion Erntefest, the inmates of two Jewish labor camps were taken out and shot to death near Maidanek. The camps were the Deutsche Ausruestungswerke (munition plant) on Lipowa Street, and the barracks at the airport.

Simultaneously, smaller Jewish labor groups were also wiped out in the same way. They had been employed by a number of Nazi units at Lublin, by the local S.S. Administration (Standort Administration), and by the S.S. Hospital, etc.

According to available evidence, four Jews among those taken to Maidanek were returned to the S.S. Hospital from which they managed to escape. One of them was a male nurse called Vogelgarn. There is also evidence to the fact that several Jewish medical specialists were spared at the same time in order to perform an operation. They too may have been able to flee Maidanek.

Anyone who has any information concerning the fate or whereabouts of Vogelgarn, or of any of the Jewish doctors at Maidanek, or has any other pertinent information is requested to get in touch with Dr. Nehemiah Robinson, director of the Institute of Jewish Affairs, World Jewish Congress, 15 East 84th Street, New York 28, N.Y.
